Henrietta

It is a lovely day.

Feodora and Gino have made plans.

They meet on Pineapple Lane.

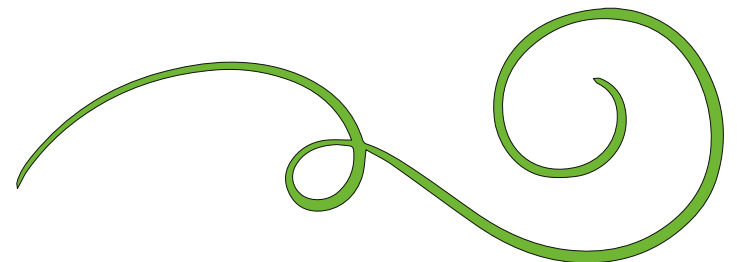

That's where Feodora lives.

Today, the two children want to go to the big flower meadow.

The path leads along a stream.

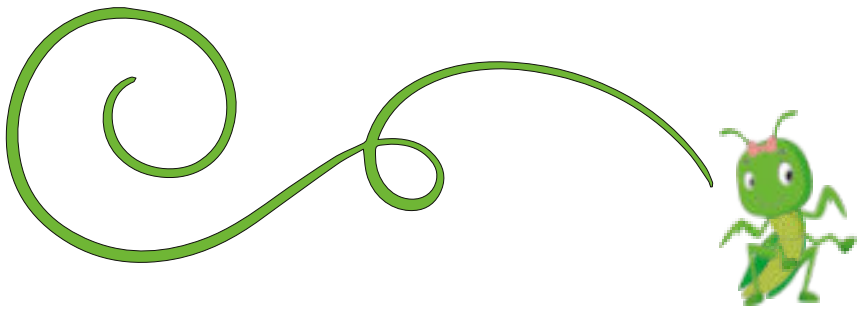

They have to be extra careful there.

They promised their parents they would be.

Ananasweg

The most beautiful flowers grow there.

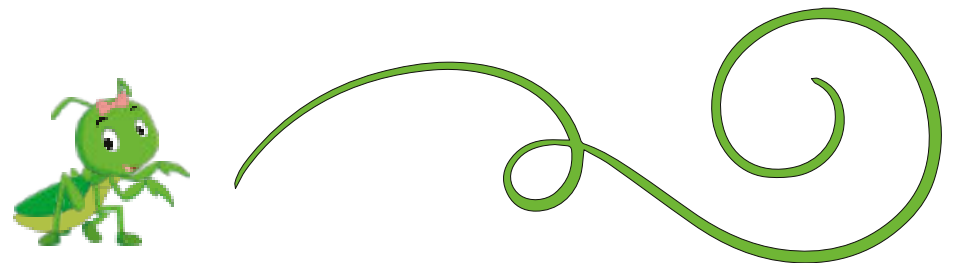

The children want to pick a lovely bunch for their mums.

Today is Egg Day.

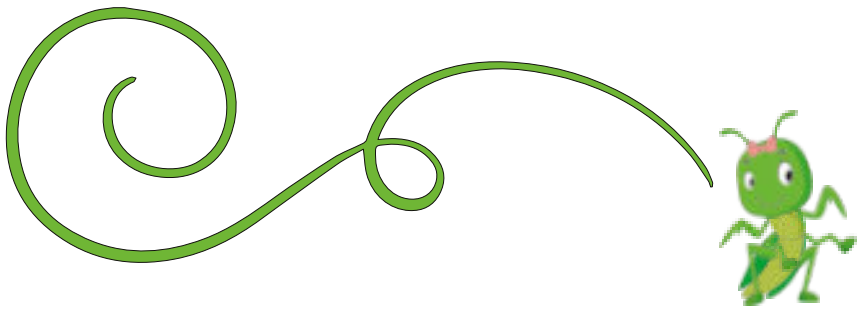

That's the day, six years ago, when their mums laid their eggs.

Feodora and Gino hatched from those eggs later on.

Egg Day is a bit like Mother's Day.

At last, they arrive at the flower meadow.

There are so many lovely flowers here.

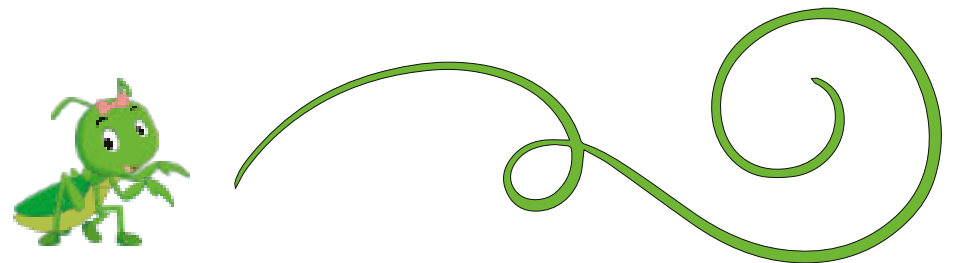

Bees are buzzing and butterflies are fluttering everywhere.

They sit on the blossoms and enjoy the sunshine.

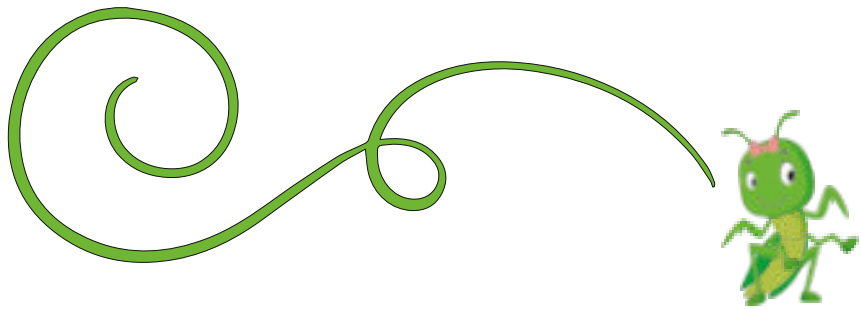

Feodora sees a pretty pair of dragonflies.

She is full of delight.

Gino thinks they are cute too.

Feodora watches the dragonflies.

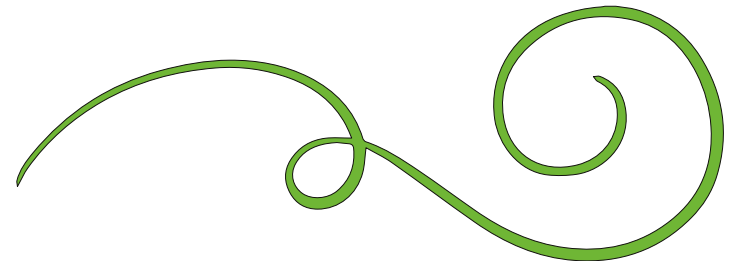

Suddenly, Gino starts to sing:

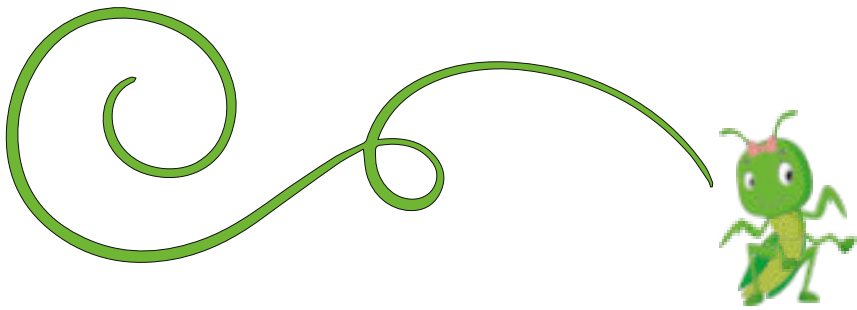

"The speedy dragonfly,
so clever and spry.

She flies all around,
without a sound,
and lifts off in the blink of an eye."

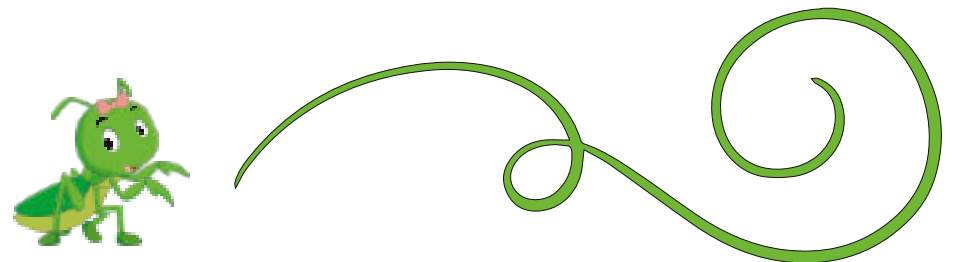

Feodora starts to laugh.

Gino laughs too.

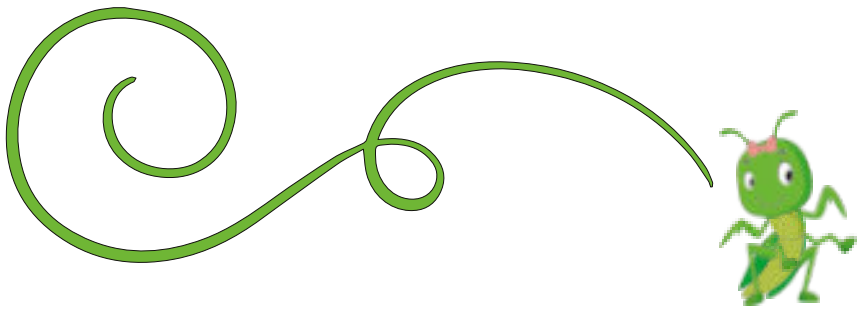

Even the dragonflies look like they're laughing along.

They fly one more loop over the dino-children's heads.

Then they flutter away.

Feodora starts picking flowers.

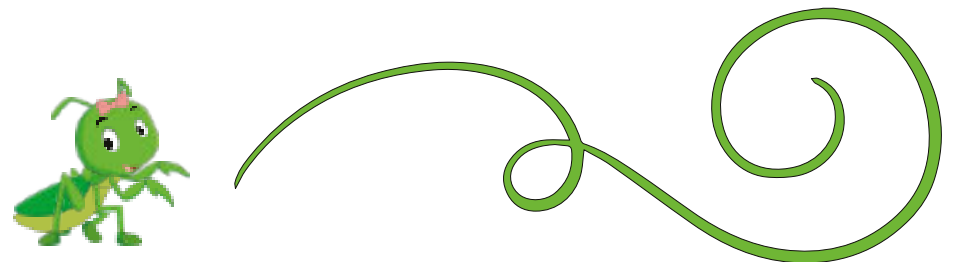

“Look, Gino! These ones are especially pretty!” she says.

Gino nods and walks after her.

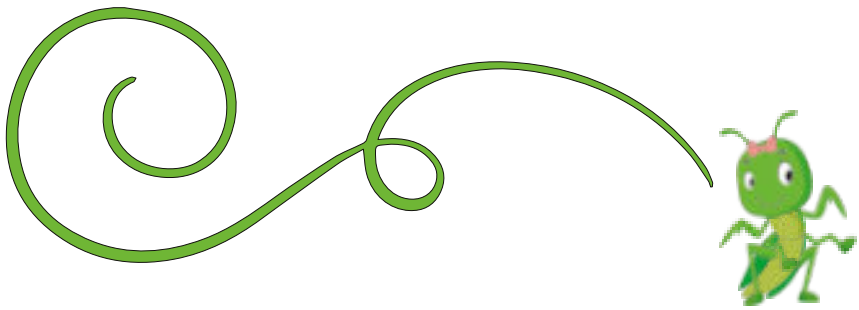

Feodora stands in front of a lovely buttercup.

A little grasshopper is sitting on it.

“Hello, little hopper! You’re so cute. I’ll call you Henrietta!” she says.

Gino laughs.

Feodora always gives little crawlers names.

Then Henrietta jumps in a high arc to the next flower.

It looks like she wants to show the children the prettiest flowers.

Feodora and Gino laugh and run after her.
